<td>Stretch arms out like the rays of the sun</td>
<td>This is the hive of a social bee. There are 11 species of native social bees in Australia (you can search for a picture of their nest by typing “tetragonula nest” into Google Images. The European Honey Bee is also a social bee.</td>

| In one hive
There are many busy bees
The Queen bee is laying many eggs
The maidens are busy caring and feeding the Queen bee and the baby brood
Working together to keep the hive humming | Place finger puppets on fingers (suggest one on each hand). Children could then move around the room, caring for multiple eggs (could use small cushions or cotton balls), with the bees quietly chatting to each other about what you are doing. |                                                                                                                                 |
| In another nest
A bee has built a tiny tunnel nest
In a tree or plant stem
Working alone
Using clay or leaves or soil to build the snuggly cocoon.
She lays her eggs
And fills the burrow with pollen and nectar for the newly hatched bees to eat.
She leaves them to hatch and grow without her help. | One finger puppet could build a burrow in a gap between some cushions, and the bee could stock the burrow with pollen (cotton balls).
Role-play working quietly to look after one or two eggs. | Most Australian native bees are solitary, working independently to build a nest and raise their eggs.
The female bee will die before her eggs are hatched - sharing this detail is optional. |
| The bees have left the hive
The flowers are blooming
The bees are buzzing
Collecting pollen and nectar
To feed all the hungry bees in the hive
Foragers buzz from flower to flower
Buzz go the bees
Hour after hour
Buzz go the bees
From flower to flower
Sucking out the nectar and flying it home
Storing up the nectar in the honeycomb
Honey in the hive | Role-play bees visiting flowers (different stations around the room), collecting pollen and nectar (could use blocks or balls), the bees are busy. Occasionally the bees should return to the hive to drop off pollen and nectar. |                                                                                                                                 |
